

Real Estate Circle

Enriching Columbia Business School's Alumni Community

The Columbia Business School Real Estate Circle is an exclusive alumni-only group that provides unique networking and educational events for its members. The Circle is run by a board, consisting of faculty and alumni members, who curate tailor made experiences for the group. Events and programs are designed to encourage network and relationship building and professional development, and often include intimate gatherings with leading real estate practitioners and other business leaders, exclusive behind the scenes tours of signature real estate projects, academic lectures, and more.

The Circle supports targeted programming initiatives and activities, as well as new and ongoing and priorities of the Paul Milstein Center for Real Estate and the MBA Real Estate Program. All of which are intended to promote real estate education, and bring together members of the Columbia Business School Real Estate community. Not only do these efforts help ensure that Columbia Business School continues to attract the best and brightest scholars, but also helps to strengthen and enrich our wide reaching alumni network. Leveraging the academic strength of Columbia Business School and the Paul Milstein Center's expansive network of senior real estate practitioners, members are exposed to thought-provoking content presented by scholars and industry experts.

The Circle, and the Paul Milstein Center for Real Estate, presents the annual Real Estate Symposium, a substantive educational and networking half-day forum, designed to foster the business interests and professional advancement of alumni.
