However, if we look at the trend of the 1961 - 1968 index, we notice that the economic indicators show a general decrease in economic activity. This is evidenced by the declining index numbers for various sectors.

Economic Indicators:
- GDP: Decreased by 10% from 1961 to 1968.
- Industrial Production: Saw a decline of 15% during the same period.
- Consumer Price Index: rose by 5%.

Despite these declines, there were some positive aspects. The agricultural sector saw an increase of 20% in productivity. However, this was not enough to offset the overall economic downturn.

Support for Export:
Imports were strongly supported with increased credit availability and favorable exchange rates. This helped bolster the export sector and contribute to the country's economic growth.

Internal Support:
Domestic consumption remained strong, with households and businesses increasing their spending. This helped sustain the economy during the challenging times.
